

friday lectures

The friday lectures discuss strategies in higher education on how to prepare students at their “home-university” to meet the challenging demands of globalisation. In the last 20 years questions of the internationalization of European higher education – also stimulated by the Bologna Process – have moved into the focus of discussion (“mainstreaming of internationalization”). This time the friday lectures will present the strategy “internationalization ‘at home’” or “internationalization of the curriculum”, that is ways of integrating intercultural, international and global dimensions into the curricula and teaching/learning processes. From the perspective of different disciplines an expert panel will discuss the prerequisites, advantages as well as problems of implementing English as the language of teaching and learning. The friday lectures will start with the presentation of the publication “Universität in Zeiten von Bologna“ (2012) – a collection of inter/national contributions to the friday lectures including responses of scholars and students of the University of Vienna.
